We all know the real estate mantra: Location, location, location. But who will help you find those coveted hotspots? In Boston, one need only have Beth Dickerson as a guide, particularly in the Back Bay, Beacon Hill, the South End, and the waterfront. Beth started in the real estate business in 1986, running her own shop for several years before joining the residential division of R. M. Bradley & Co. where she was the company's top sales and listing broker for more than a decade. In late 2003, she started her own residential firm, Dickerson Real Estate, which became part of Gibson | Sotheby's International Realty in April 2007. A regular on the charitable social circuit, Beth supports numerous local causes.

He was the president of Boston's City Council at 28 and ran for mayor of Boston four years later. Lawrence S. DiCara is a lawyer who practices in real estate and administrative law and public finance and is still talked about as a possible candidate for public office. He has served on numerous public and private boards and is still actively involved in a number of organizations in the city. Even with his political, legal and teaching resume, Larry stands out in one other area: He and wife, Teresa Spillane, are the parents of triplet daughters, Sophie, Flora and Catherine.
